Noblis Receives Georgia Tech Internship Employer of the Year Award

FALLS CHURCH, Va.—March 21, 2011—Noblis, Inc., a non-profit science, technology, and strategy organization, has been named the 2011 Internship Program Employer of the Year by the Georgia Institute of Technology.

“We are extremely proud to receive this award,” says H. Gilbert Miller, Corporate Vice President and Chief Technology Officer. “Our internship program is a rewarding experience that is mutually beneficial for our employees and our interns. It gives our staff an opportunity to work with some of the brightest young men and women from schools around the country and it infuses our workplace with new ideas and fresh thinking. The interns are mentored in a nurturing environment and get real-world professional experience that helps them grow, learn, and expand their academic education.”

Noblis’ internship program runs for eight weeks every summer. Each year, Noblis identifies staffing needs in a wide range of fields including modeling and simulation, systems engineering, computer science, biometric technologies, life and chemical/biological sciences, telecommunications and networking, and corporate business operations. Intern applicants are matched to Noblis’ needs and recruited based on their skills as well as for their personal, academic, and professional accomplishments.

In addition to working on projects, interns attend weekly professional, collaborative, and social events. At the end of the eight weeks, interns present their work to the leadership of Noblis, including the president and chief executive officer.

Due to the success of the program, Noblis doubled the number of interns it accepted for 2010, employing 39 students from 20 different schools.
